WHAT DO YOU THINK?

RedEye asked people in Boystown on Tuesday how a perception of a rise in neighborhood crime has affected them. JESSICA CILELLA, REDEYE

"I guess it makes you feel unsafe, but it's not necessarily this neighborhood, it's everywhere."

—Dayne Cunard, 23, Loop

"I always assumed this neighborhood was the safest, but now I don't know. It's really sad. Even at night I felt like this neighborhood was safe. I'll still walk down here, but I'm always aware of my surroundings."

—Stephanie Annoh, 23, Lakeview

"I came in for the holiday weekend and a lot of folks were saying, 'You know, Chicago's a lot more dangerous than it used to be,' and I've always thought of Boystown as a safe haven and a close-knit community, but I'm walking away from Chicago with a different taste in my mouth. ... So it definitely has an impact, and it's concerning because this is my home away from home."

FEAR FACTOR

VIDEO OF WEEKEND ATTACK SPARKS DEBATE ON VIOLENCE IN BOYSTOWN

Chicago Tribune

A video of a weekend fight among a crowd of youth in Boystown has increased community concerns about the number of youths gathering late night on the sidewalks and street corners, particularly along Halsted Street.

Some residents say crowds of young people have led to a jump in crime and made them afraid to walk the streets at night. Others denounce such concerns and say it's a case of white residents being intolerant of young black people who visit the neighborhood from other parts of the city.

This debate in what has long been the hub of Chicago's LGBT community will be the focus of a Chicago Alternative Policing Strategy meeting scheduled for 7 p.m.

Wednesday at Inter-American Elementary School (851 W. Waveland Ave.).

"To sit and say we're just trying to kick out the youth or the gay youth or the gay black youth is totally unfair to everyone who is showing concern," said John Cunningham, whose partner videotaped the Sunday night fight, in which a 25-year-old man was stabbed and hospitalized. "We want the neighborhood to be safe and friendly and a good place for everyone involved. Not only for those who come to visit but also for those of us who live here."

A Chicago police spokesman said Tuesday that the fight in the 3300 block of North Halsted Street still is being investigated. Witnesses told police a group of young people walking south on Halsted began yelling at two people walking north at about 11:45 p.m. Sunday, leading to a fight that ended with one man stabbed multiple times.

Police said the fight was not racially motivated and was primarily between two black youths. Authorities also said this is at least the second stabbing in that area in the past few weeks, though police don't believe the incidents were related or were hate crimes.

Ald. Tom Tunney (44th) released a statement Tuesday saying that he is "extremely concerned about the recent attacks that have taken place in our neighborhood" and that police are working to put more officers on the beat. REDEYE FILE PHOTO

Residents vary on assessment of crime

Chicago Tribune

Some of the recent conflicts involving young people in Boystown led to the creation of a Facebook group called "Take Back Boystown," which as of late Tuesday had more than 2,220 fans.

James Tyrcha, 34, is one of those fans. He said he moved out of Boystown in January because he no longer felt safe.

"It's terrifying to walk down the street at all anymore in the evening time," Tyrcha said. "It's not about race. If they were Hispanic it would be the same thing. If they were white it would be the same thing."

Some believe that the influx of young people from other neighborhoods can be traced to youth programs at the Center on Halsted, an LGBT community center. Many minority LGBT youth don't feel comfortable or safe being themselves in their own neighborhoods, so they come to the center, which offers everything from a safe space to interact with friends to mentoring and even job-training courses.

Modesto Valle, the center's executive director, said he's concerned about the crimes that have been committed but thinks it's unfair to lump the young people who come to the center for help or friendship with those causing problems on the streets.

"People are judging the book by the cover, when in reality many of these young people mean no harm," Valle said. "If we could all come to the table and respect one another and hear solutions, I think we can get there. It's a very complicated situation and it's going to take all voices being heard."

Whose dog poo? DNA doesn't lie

JASON STEELE
@tribune.com

Perhaps you heard the recent news about a housing community in New Hampshire that grew tired of pet owners refusing to pick up after their pooches. The solution: Hire a doggie DNA company called PooPrints to sniff out the offenders.

According to CNN, residents are required to submit DNA samples of their pets. When a stray pile is found, the company tests the droppings, compares them to the DNA on file and fines the neglectful dog owners.

Some people think this is DNA testing gone too far, but I am all for it. There have been a number of times when I have scolded a dog owner for letting his or her pet park its business on the sidewalk and then leaving it there for people to tromp through. It's disgusting, disrespectful and illegal.

But why stop at dog droppings? We could start testing and taxing Chicago residents for lots of offenses. This concept could revolutionize how we behave and stimulate the local economy at the same time. If the city is willing to take photos of cars running red lights and fine the drivers, then why not test the McDonald's bag that some jackass tossed out of a car window?

Just think of all the offenders we could nab with DNA tracking! Start with the smokers. Why smokers think tossing their butts in the street is okey-dokey is beyond me. It leeches poisons into the groundwater, harms wildlife and looks trashy. The Chicago Police Department should start a CPD:DNA:SVU:Miami-whatever task force that collects and tests the gazillions of cigarette butts around town. For every one that matches a person, the offender gets a $5 fine.

The math is compelling. A pack-a-day smoker with a littering problem would rack up $100 a day—or as much as $36,500 a year. Multiply that figure by the tens of thousands of smokers in this city, and Chicago not only is out of debt—we've got a surplus!

Yes, some people would complain about civil rights violations, but the benefits outweigh the deficits: cleaner city, cleaner air, cleaner lungs and money in the bank. It's a win-win-win-win solution!

Don't stop there, either. I propose we test all types of litter. Gum spat onto the street. Beer cans left in the park. Gym towels strewn all over the locker room. And fine the hell out of the person who is constantly leaving chicken bones on the "L." Heck, we could have funded AIDS research for years with the fines made on the amount of trash left after the Pride parade alone!

In order for this to work, we need to get everyone's DNA on file. But how do we do that? Ha! Trick question. The government probably already has our DNA. Your fine might be in the mail.

6 KEY POINTS

The trial of 25-year-old Casey Anthony in the death of her 2-year-old daughter lasted more than six weeks and sparked a media circus around Orlando, Fla. It featured allegations of sexual abuse, party photos, questions regarding Anthony's competence and various theories on what happened to her daughter, Caylee, before Caylee's remains were found near her grandparents' home in 2008. Here are other key facts about the case. CNN

Charges

Casey Anthony was charged with seven counts, including first-degree murder, and could have faced the death penalty. The jury convicted her on four misdemeanor counts of providing false information to law enforcement officers.

Missing a month

Caylee was last seen June 16, 2008, but was not reported missing until July 15, 2008, when Anthony's mother tracked her daughter down and demanded answers regarding Caylee's whereabouts.

Chloroform

Prosecutors said Anthony used chloroform to render her daughter unconscious and then duct-taped her mouth and nose to suffocate her. They alleged she put the child's body in the trunk of her car before disposing of it.

Alternate theory

Defense attorneys said the child drowned in the Anthony's above-ground pool June 16, and that Anthony and her father panicked upon finding her there and covered up the death. Her father denied that.

Party photos

According to testimony, Anthony was not looking for her missing child as she later told police. Instead, she moved out of her parents' home, got a tattoo and went shopping, witnesses said. She also partied at Orlando nightclubs and participated in a "hot body" contest. The defense said Anthony was abused as a child and had been taught to conceal her pain.

Imaginary friends

Anthony testified about a wealthy suitor and a nanny, who her defense attorney later acknowledged were among a host of people she made up, referring to them as her "imaginary friends."

FRENZY OVER TODDLER MURDER CASE COMES TO A CLIMAX; JURY RULES MOM NOT GUILTYOrlando Sentinel

ORLANDO, FLA. What happened to 2-year-old Caylee Anthony? That has been the question.

Three years after the toddler who captivated the world was reported missing from her east Orange County, Fla., home, a jury decided prosecutors failed to prove that Caylee's 25-year-old single mother, Casey Anthony, killed her.

"Casey did not murder Caylee; it's just that simple," lead defense attorney Jose Baez said outside the courtroom minutes after the verdict was read. "While we are happy for Casey, there are no winners in this case."

On Tuesday, the 12-member panel rendered verdicts that shocked and outraged many: not guilty of first-degree murder. Not guilty of aggravated child abuse. Not guilty of aggravated manslaughter of a child.

After deliberating for 11 hours over two days, the jurors, who heard from dozens of witnesses and saw hundreds of pieces of evidence throughout Anthony's trial, convicted her of four counts of lying to law enforcement, which carry a maximum sentence of one year in prison per count.

Anthony, who has been jailed since October 2008, will be sentenced on those charges at 9 a.m. Thursday.

She could walk out of the courthouse a free woman.

Through their attorney, Anthony's parents released a statement that read, in part: "While the family may never know what has happened to Caylee Marie Anthony, they now have closure for this chapter of their life. They will now begin the long process of rebuilding their lives."

The verdict is a stunning victory for Baez, who was a relatively unknown lawyer until Anthony retained him. Outside the courtroom, Baez spoke briefly and said now is the time for Anthony to "grieve and grow, and somehow get her life back together."

But before Baez took the microphone, defense attorney Cheney Mason addressed the crowd of reporters in a packed room in the Orange County Courthouse.

REUTERS PHOTOS

"I hope that this is a lesson to those of you that have indulged in media assassination the last three years," Mason said. "I'm disgusted by some of the lawyers ... getting on television and talking about cases they don't know a damn thing about. ... Now you've learned your lesson."

Soon after, State Attorney Lawson Lamar held a news conference across the street from the courthouse, surrounded by the investigative and trial teams.

He said his team felt "disappointed with the verdict today and surprised, because we know the facts."

Outside the courthouse in the moments leading up to the verdict, crowds swarmed the courthouse doors and sprawling courtyard. Dozens of people crowded into a cafe and overflowed out the doors at the adjacent public defender's office to watch the proceedings on TV.

The cafe was silent as the verdict was read aloud by the court clerk. The crowd screamed and howled as the "not-guilty" verdicts were announced. The shocked spectators grew louder with each "not guilty."

"I just don't feel justice is served," 44-year-old Lynda Nickerson said. "The laws need to be changed if people can get away with murder." The public may never know how the jury came to its conclusion.

The panel declined an offer to speak to the media after the verdict. The judge in the

TRENDING: CASEY ANTHONY

From the instant word came Tuesday that Casey Anthony was found not guilty of murdering her 2-year-old daughter, social media sites were flooded with amateur commentary. Most condemned the verdict—"no justice for Caylee" was a common comment.

Within minutes of the verdict, Facebook pages devoted to Casey and Caylee Anthony filled up with hundreds of comments, most of them expressing outrage.

On Twitter, the afternoon's "trending topics" were dominated by Anthony news. Terms or hashtags that were among the top 10 included: #notguilty, #caseyanthonyverdict, Nancy Grace, Johnnie Cochran, HLN, Jose Baez and Law & Order. Here's a sampling of the Twitter chatter, from thought-provoking to humorous to emotional. CNN case signed an order barring the release of their names, even though in Florida, juror identities usually are released at the conclusion of a trial.

Russell Huekler, also known as juror No. 14, told CNN on Tuesday evening by phone that the prosecution did not prove its case. Because he was an alternate juror, he was not in the deliberations room and was not privy to how the jurors reached their decision.

Huekler, who was one of the final jurors picked in May, told lawyers he was neutral on the death penalty but probably would have voted against it. He was eager to serve on the jury.

"The big question that was not answered [was] how did Caylee die?" Huekler said.

That remains unknown.

MOST DEFINITELY MADE FOR TV

The Casey Anthony trial is a made-for-TV court case—and broadcast and cable news outlets are scrambling to capitalize on the frenzy. According to variety.com, a number of outlets—with Fox News leading the charge—already started airing specials on the case Tuesday night, in addition to continuing coverage of the verdict through primetime hours.

On the docket for the rest of the week: CBS' "48 Hours: Mystery," ABC's "Nightline" and NBC's "Dateline" all have hour-long specials looking back at the trial and forward to the sentencing, Variety reports. The question: Who will land the first interview with Anthony?

For HLN's Nancy Grace, who branded Anthony "tot mom" and who led the media circus on this case, June was the highest-rated month ever for her show, logging 1.5 million viewers, according to Variety. Grace herself became a trending Twitter topic Tuesday. One tweet, from @wyshynski, said it all: "It's entirely possible that Nancy Grace's show will out-rate the Super Bowl tonight." REDEYE

Chicago police return Tuesday from recovering the body of Christopher Szmajlo, a missing boater who had fallen into Lake Michigan Monday night near Navy Pier, about a half mile from the Chicago Harbor locks. E. JASON WAMBSGANS/TRIBUNE

'A shock to everyone'

Man, 29, found dead in Lake Michigan after falling from boat

Chicago Tribune

Rich Gierut held out hope when he heard that his nephew was missing after apparently falling from a boat into Lake Michigan.

"He was in real good shape. He worked out and everything," Gierut said of his 29-year-old nephew, Christopher Szmajlo. "We had hopes when they were looking for him that he would somehow make it to shore."

Police and firefighters looked for hours overnight before finally suspending their search at the mouth of the Chicago River. Minutes after divers returned Tuesday morning, they found Szmajlo's body in about 30 feet of water.

"This was real tragic," Gierut said. "This is a shock to everyone."

A man on another boat said he saw Szmajlo come up for a last gasp of air before he disappeared into the dark waters.

Darryl Merschak said he was slowly monitoring his sailboat from Monroe Harbor to the lighthouse off Navy Pier following Fourth of July fireworks when he and two passengers saw someone just below the surface of the water.

"We couldn't believe what we saw. He was just under the surface, and for a brief moment the man came up long enough to gasp before going down again. We were about 25 feet away at the time," Merschak said.

"We tried to get a lifesaver to him, but he was already under," he said.

Merschak said he radioed the Marine

Unit on the boat's emergency channel.

"In the first two minutes a police boat was there, and within five minutes of that, five boats and a police helicopter," he said.

A friend said Szmajlo was a musician who regularly posted songs on YouTube.

"He was into martial arts and passionate about music," the friend said in a telephone interview. "He was talented and artistic and all his songs were good. He was a good guy. He always wanted to have a fun time. His parents are really nice. It's really tough."

Szmajlo posted 20 videos on YouTube, most recently original acoustic songs "Bargain" and "365" on May 21. Szmajlo, who performed under the name "Chris Shmay," also posted covers of Pearl Jam songs.

Gierut called his nephew "a talented kid. He was always happy-go-lucky."

A suitcase escape? That's not gonna fly

4 CHETUMAL, Mexico A 19-year-old woman was arrested for allegedly trying to sneak a man out of prison in a suitcase, according to authorities in the Mexican Caribbean state of Quintana Roo.

According to officials at the prison in the city of Chetumal, the state's capital, the woman identified as Maria del Mar Arjona was caught as she was leaving the prison, pulling a black-wheeled suitcase.

Authorities said that as she was leaving through the main prison entrance, guards noticed Arjona was nervous and her suitcase looked suspiciously bulky. The guards stopped her and inside the suitcase found Juan Ramirez Tijerina.

Reports differed as to whether the couple were dating or married.

Pictures of the incident released by Quintana Roo's Department of Public Security show the man curled up inside the suitcase in a fetal position. He was covering his face when the pictures were taken.

Ramirez is serving a sentence at the Chetumal prison for violation of federal laws, public safety officials said in a statement.

Campaign dreams

If these ideas can't make Konerko an All-Star, we're not sure what will

RedEye

By now, the outrage over the failure to select Paul Konerko as an American League All-Star has reached a fever pitch. Nevertheless, it's an oversight that has a chance to be corrected if fans vote for the White Sox first baseman over four other AL Final Vote candidates.

Konerko hardly seems like the kind of guy who would do his own campaigning. "It's a great thing if you go, but if you don't go, it's not the end of the world," he told the Tribune. "I certainly won't be let down if I don't win. I know whoever is going is deserving as well."

Spoken like a true diplomat. Fortunately for him, RedEye has some suggestions as to how to curry fans' favor before Thursday's voting deadline.

END THE LOCKOUT

Fixing either the NFL or the NBA contract mess will do. No need for the Ozzie approach, however. Instead, gather labor and management in one room and calmly explain how they're not leaving until a deal is struck. Do all this with a Louisville Slugger resting innocently on the table in front of them; they'll be scared out of their minds.

GIVE THE HAWKS A LOAN

Konerko signed a three-year, $37.5 million deal in the offseason. Meanwhile, the Blackhawks recently used three trades to clear cap space ahead of the free agency period. Maybe contributing some cash so the Hawks can sign an impact player will ease the pain of losing so many fan favorites. Just make sure to get a receipt, Paulie.

CORRAL THE ASIAN CARP

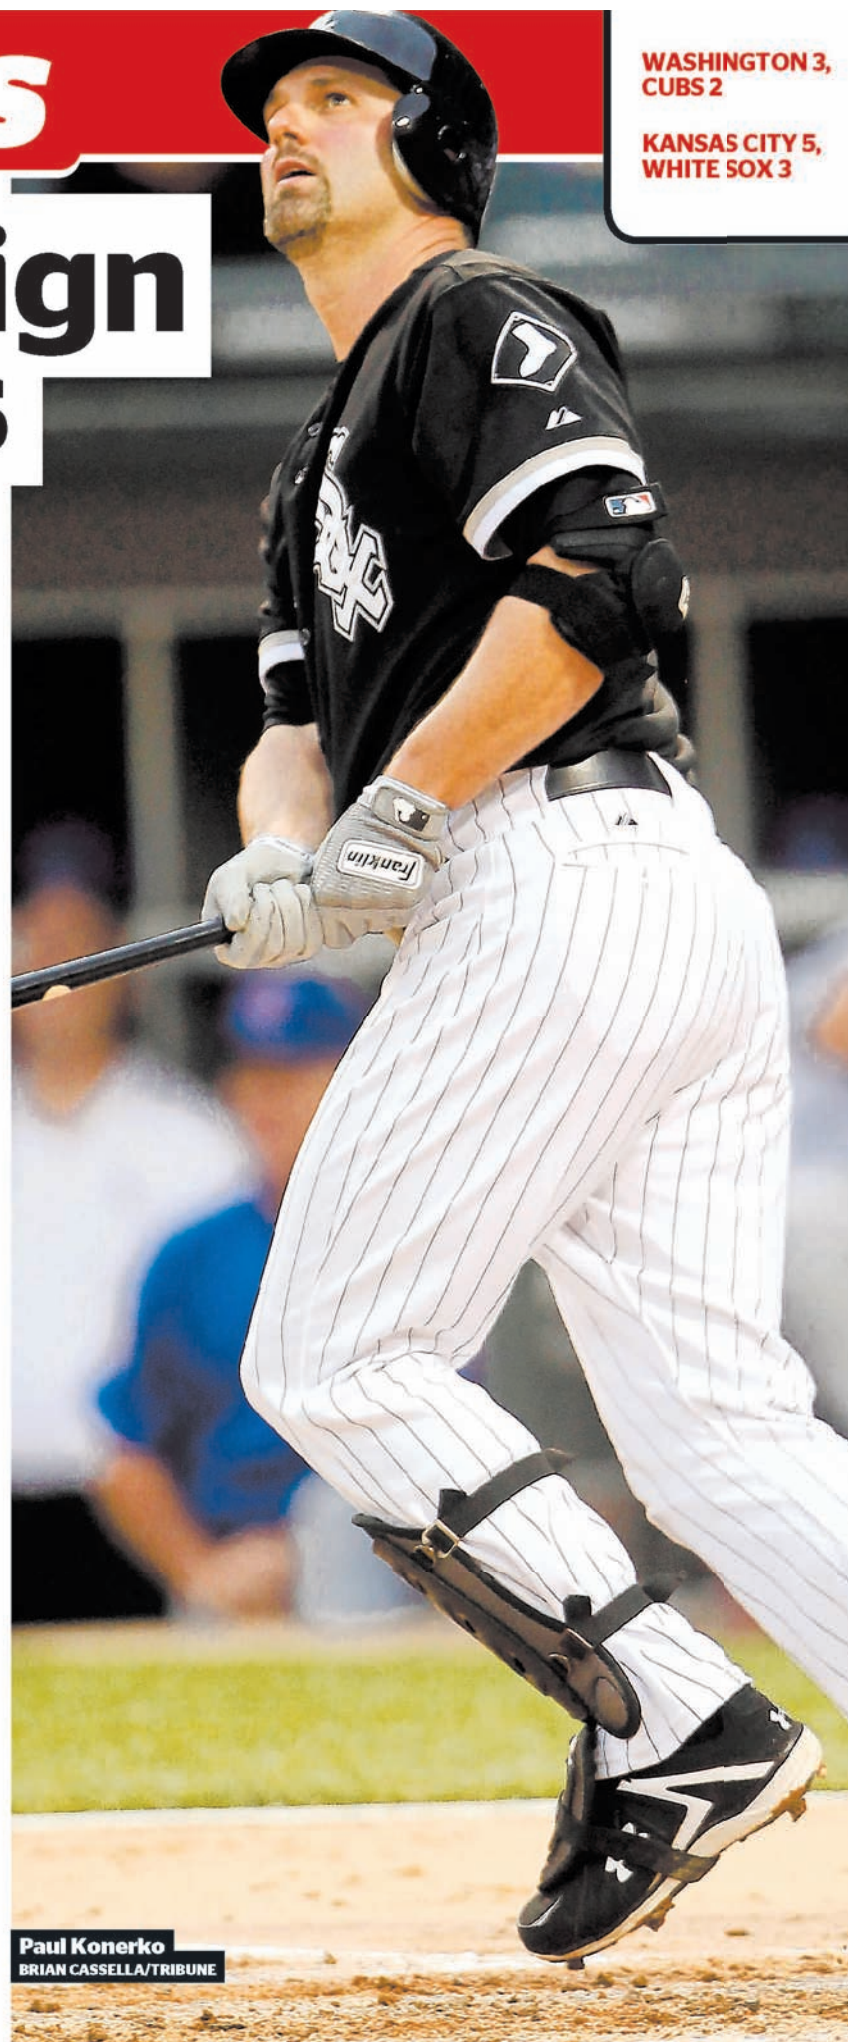

He'd probably need some help from outdoorsy buddies Mark Buehrle and Jake Peavy to make this problem go away. (Hunting trip, anyone?) But if Konerko can neutralize this threat to the Great Lakes ecosystem, no vote will remain beyond his reach.

COMBAT SNOWMAGEDDON

This is at least a few months away—we hope—but it's never too early to start figuring out how to deal with Chicago's next great and terrible blizzard. Have teammates drive snowplows, auction off a three-month vacation to his home in Arizona—anything to make winter less of a nightmare will make Konerko a shoo-in.

Should MLB revise the All-Star selection process?

As a writer who represents the common man, this statement may shock you: Fans should not select baseball's All-Star teams. With something as crucial as home-field advantage in the World Series on the line, popularity contests, name recognition and effective marketing campaigns should not determine a roster; a player's performance should.

At the time selections were made, Paul Konerko was fourth in the AL in home runs, fifth in batting average and third in RBIs—and he's not on the roster. Cleveland shortstop Asdrubal Cabrera led all AL shortstops in batting average, homers and RBIs and he had to be selected as a reserve.

My fix? The top statistical performers at each position—both offensively and defensively—should start. Pitchers must be available to pitch to be selected and reserves get selected by the people who know them best: their peers. Let fans vote on who sings the national anthem and "Take Me Out to the Ballgame." Leave popularity contests where they belong: in high school.

I, too, was outraged that Paul Konerko, a player seriously contending for the AL Triple Crown, was left off the team. My shock at Konerko's snub was exceeded only by my bewilderment that Derek Jeter, a player sporting a mediocre .256 batting average and a paltry 20 RBIs, was voted in as a starter by the fans.

Fans need to be taken out of the All-Star voting process. With home-field advantage in the World Series at stake, the game is too important to allow casual fans to gum up the process. And while I think your idea of choosing the statistical leaders is a good one, it's too convoluted to work. We don't need America's baseball writers involved, as they've managed to completely screw up Hall of Fame voting.

My solution? Let the AL players vote for the AL team and the NL players vote for the NL team. Leave the fans at home to watch the selection show.

1 How should the Cubs' 16-year-old prospect spend his $1.1 million bonus?	On fans. Hush money.	By donating to the "Ernest Wilkins wants to buy the giant butt from the 'Baby Got Back' video" fund. Duh.	Why not? Giving garbage bags full of money to unproven prospects has worked so well in the past.	On a one-way ticket to a non-extradition country. Take the money and run from the Cubs, son.	Legal services to become a free agent immediately after he becomes a superstar for the Cubs.
2 Why have the Cubs blown 12 of their past 30 save opportunities?	They're not a .500 team.	Because, like I've said millions of times, the Cubs are butt-rageous. BUTT. RAGEOUS.	Because they are bad at baseball.	Because the Cubs remain committed to providing fans with soul-sucking summers for another 100 years.	To prove to everyone that they are the best in baseball ... at letting their fans down.
3 Losing a game on a wild pitch is like losing the Casey Anthony trial. Everyone walks.	... getting a girl's number, then finding out you got one of the digits wrong. Just embarrassing.	... waking up July 5 and finding out Ramon Ortiz is a Cub.	... losing a cute girl to a D-bag rocking a Kukoc jersey in a non-hipster kind of way.	... losing a game on a balk. Just ask the Royals' Aaron Crow.
4 How can Paul Konerko convince fans to put him in the All-Star Game?	Campaign in Florida. They always get it right.	Hasn't he done enough? OH CAPTAIN, MY CAPTAIN!	The fans who voted Jeter in should be embarrassed enough to do it without any prompting.	Tell everyone he plays for the Yankees. Their ass-clown fans would vote for a corpse in pinstripes.	Hack into mlb.com and place a Red Sox or Yankees logo next to his name.
5 Who is Tyler Farrar?	A Stage 3 clinger.	Don't know, don't care. Google "Rock Creek Park" by the Blackbyrds. Listen to it. You're welcome.	The next American cyclist to be celebrated before he admits to doping and breaks everyone's hearts.	If you actually know the answer to this question, you suck at life and probably wear spandex.	The cycling world's version of the White Sox's Tyler Flowers.

Time to start talking

Winger Viktor Stalberg and defenseman Chris Campoli of the Blackhawks were among 23 NHL players who filed for salary arbitration Tuesday.

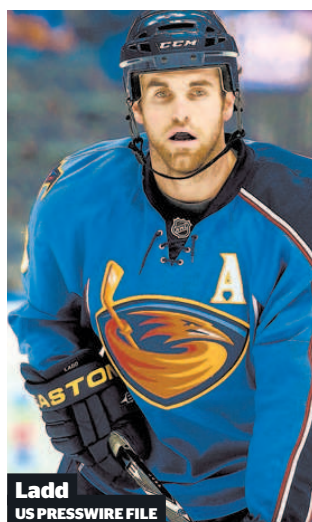

The players are restricted free agents, and general manager Stan Bowman has been negotiating with their agents in an effort to sign them. Last week, Bowman expressed confidence he would sign Stalberg and Campoli—along with Michael Frolik, who isn't arbitration-eligible.

NHL arbitration hearings will be held July 20 to Aug. 4 in Toronto.

Last season, the Hawks and Antti Niemi went to arbitration. After the goaltender was awarded a one-year, $2.75 million deal, the Hawks let him walk as a free agent.

Campoli and Stalberg still can reach agreements with the Hawks before the arbitration hearings.

Ladd in a party mood

US PRESSWIRE FILE

With a new contract in his back pocket, Winnipeg captain Andrew Ladd can turn his attention to more important things.

"I'm getting married July 17 in Las Vegas," the ex-Blackhawk said Tuesday. "It's exciting. Now we can kind of let this all go by and start focusing on that and get excited about that big day."

Ladd re-signed with the Jets for five years and $22 million. He won the Stanley Cup with Carolina in 2006 and with the Hawks in 2010, but was traded away from both teams.

FOOD FIGHT

SETTLING DELICIOUS, AGE-OLD DISAGREEMENTS ONE ARGUMENT AT A TIME

Some like their pizza cut in squares, while others swear by slices. For as long as we've been stuffing our faces with delicious food, there have been conflicts about the way we eat it. Addressing such fervent foodie issues, we bring you Food Fight.

This week: Pinkberry opens its first Chicago location this week. Do we really need more frozen yogurt shops?

YES

Enough fro-yo spots? No way. Even though Pinkberry is a little late to the game in Chicago, better late than never, right?

Thank you, Pinkberry, for feeding into my fro-yo obsession. Its tart flavor tastes way better than bland vanilla ice cream. And when I top it with fresh fruit, frozen yogurt makes me feel guilt-free for indulging in dessert. It's so yummy and good for you. Besides, there's plenty of ice cream and cupcake shops in the city, why not more fro-yo places?

—LEONOR VIVANCO

NO

Well, look who finally decided to show up. Welcome to Chicago, Pinkberry! It's too bad that you—the fro-yo joint that kicked off the yo-yo trend in L.A.—decided to wait until Chicago was completely overrun with, let's face it, mediocre at best, frozen yogurt shops that are all basically the same with slightly different fruity names. I want to believe that you're as good as everyone says you are, but after all of the flavorless, airy and absolutely unsatisfying frozen yogurt I've tried, I've pretty much given up on this trend. I'll be at Margie's Candies slurping the last remnants of my sundae from my clam bowl if you need me.

Not into jam bands? Don't miss these other acts at the Caravan

By Andy Downing

The Dave Matthews Band Caravan will take over Chicago's South Side lakefront for three days of music and mellow vibes from Friday through Sunday. And while the fest's lineup draws heavily on the jam band circuit—Umphrey's McGee, OAR and Moe are scheduled to appear—there's enough diversity to appeal to music fans of all stripes. Want proof? No problem.

ANDY DOWNING IS A METROMIX SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR. METROMIX@TRIBUNE.COM

Dave Matthews Band Caravan

When: 11 a.m. Fri.-Sun.

Where: Chicago's Lakeside, 8555 S. Green Bay Ave.

Tickets: $85-$195, 800-594-8499

FRIDAY

DAVE MATTHEWS BAND (ALSO SATURDAY AND SUNDAY)

For one so unassuming, Dave Matthews, who will headline each of the Caravan's three nights with his namesake band, sure draws an unhealthy amount of ire (Googling "Dave Matthews Band sucks" returns more than 60,400 results). True, this can feel deserved when the group plays to its worst tendencies and locks into overheated, unfocused jams, but few acts on this bill offer the same potential to surprise.

DRIVE-BY TRUCKERS

The Southern rockers, always a ferocious live act, splintered off in new musical directions on their latest album, "Go-Go Boots," balancing country-ish tunes with comparatively swinging murder ballads steeped in Muscle Shoals soul.

GETTY IMAGES

EDWARD SHARPE & THE MAGNETIC ZEROS

Anyone who misses the Polyphonic Spree should check out this L.A.-based hippie-folk ensemble, which doles out good vibes and joyous, orchestral tunes in equal measure.

GARY CLARK JR.

Though just 27 years old, the Texas-born bluesman is no stranger to the spotlight, having already performed alongside the likes of B.B. King, Eric Clapton and Buddy Guy at the 2010 Crossroads Guitar Festival.

RAY LAMONTAGNE

The New Hampshire-born singer-songwriter might look like a Civil War-era soldier in recent press photos, but his whisper-soft songs are far removed from the battlefield, reveling instead in those quiet moments shared between intimates.

SATURDAY

BEN FOLDS

From the opening words to "Underground" ("I was never cool in school"), his breakthrough single with Ben Folds Five, the tuneful piano man has always had a knack at speaking out for the underdog.

KID CUDI

The Cleveland-born rapper's words are so introspective and raw that it often sounds as if they were recorded while he kicked back on a therapist's couch. His latest album, "Man on the Moon II: The Legend of Mr. Rager," finds him delving into those compulsions (drugs, predatory women) that make up the dark side of fame.

VIEUX FARKA TOURE

The Malian singer and guitarist, eldest son of famed musician Ali Farka Toure, cuts his own musical path on his latest album, "The Secret," a jam-laden effort that features performances from Caravan artists such as Matthews and Soulive guitarist Eric Krasno. Could an onstage collaboration be in the works?

SUNDAY

THE FLAMING LIPS

Wayne Coyne's arty psych-rock crew, which turns its concerts into circus-like affairs complete with animal costumes, strobe lights and copious amounts of confetti, has become a staple of the summer festival circuit.

EMMYLOU HARRIS

While her voice might have lost some of the luster that made her such a perfect foil for Gram Parsons in the early '70s, the roots-rock siren proves she's still capable of moments of spectral beauty on her latest album, "Hard Bargain."

GOMEZ

These Bonnaroo-loved Brits, who won England's esteemed Mercury Prize in '98 for their debut album "Bring It On," split time between stripped-down, bluesy cuts and more elaborate art-rock excursions.

THE JAYHAWKS

The Minneapolis roots-rockers, who are currently putting the finishing touches on their first album of new material since 2003's "Rainy Day Music," build songs around the engaging vocal harmonies of dual frontmen Mark Olson and Gary Louris.

SHARON JONES & THE DAP-KINGS

Blessed with a dynamic stage presence and a set of pipes to match, soul belter Jones has been known to turn her concerts into de facto dance classes, demonstrating her own moves (The Mashed Potato, The Funky Chicken) before pulling unsuspecting audience members onstage to cut a rug.

MICHAEL FRANTI & SPEARHEAD

With his dreadlocks and bare feet (Franti eschews shoes onstage and everywhere else), the fiery reggae singer looks like the kind of guy who might invite you to kick around the hacky sack for a bit between afternoon bands. His music can be just as welcoming, tending toward joyous spirituals.

5. Warped Tour

11:30 a.m. Sat. at First Midwest Bank Amphitheater

Highlights: Foxy Shazam, A Day to Remember.

Jennifer Lim on Facebook networking, communism and sounding like Jet Li

By Julia Borcherts

For Hong Kong native Jennifer Lim, timing is everything. In "Chinglish"—the world premiere comedy by Tony Award-winner David Henry Hwang ("M. Butterfly") about the cultural and linguistic complications that arise when an American travels to China to pitch a business proposal—Lim portrays Xu Yan, a vice minister who develops a complicated relationship with the American. But due to actors union restrictions for immigrants, Lim—who moved to New York in 2004 after earning her MFA at the Yale School of Drama—wouldn't have even been considered for the part had the play been developed any earlier than last year, when her green card came through.

She's since garnered rave reviews for her hilarious and poignant performance in "Chinglish." We called Lim to find out more about the show and her road to the Goodman stage.

How were you cast?

I found out on Facebook from somebody who was helping to cast a reading and was looking for bilingual Mandarin speakers—it was a closed reading, he'd only written half the play. And then the readings became workshops, and I was invited back to do them. And then after my green card came, I was like [laughs], "Oh, OK, I can actually do this."

The play is a hit with Chicago audiences. But as someone from Hong Kong, how does it resonate with you?

I think David's really nailed it. Since China's opened up, the influx of Western influences have started seeping in, to a certain degree. When I go into China for work or to visit, there's always a period in the beginning—because I'm so blown away by the changes and how fast everything is moving, especially if you're in the bigger cities—you tend to forget that China is still a communist country. You're eating and shopping and playing and then all of a sudden, you come across crazy censorship or somebody who will share their experiences with the Cultural Revolution.

What surprises people most about your performance?

When we do talkbacks after the show, everyone's surprised to hear me speak English without an accent. My mother's Korean, and my father's Chinese, so English was the common language at home. And I went to international school growing up in Hong Kong.

I remember the first couple readings that I did back in New York—really trying to nail that Mandarin accent on the English is quite tricky. And I think I got it when a friend came to see one of the readings and said, "That was amazing! You sounded just like Jet Li!" [Laughs.]

Where do you like to go in Chicago when you're not working?

We've been pretty good about checking out things on our day off—the architectural boat tour, Millennium Park, the Art Institute. A couple cast members discovered the bar at the Felix Hotel; Fridays and Saturdays, they have three-piece jazz, so we go there. I was also at Andy's and it was fantastic! It was the last set and the musicians were just having a ball.

ROAST ROLL CALL

Who really deserves to call out Charlie?

Charlie Sheen will return to TV the same night Season

9 of "Two and a Half Men" kicks off — though Sheen will be far from CBS. The goddess-loving former sitcom star will be the guest of honor at a Comedy Central roast set to premiere Sept. 19, just after the first episode of "Men" starring Ashton Kutcher airs. "You could say I've been providing kindling for this roast for a while," Sheen said in a statement. "It's time to light it up. It's going to be epic." Listen up, Comedy Central: The roast will be even more epic if these folks show up instead of Gilbert Gottfried or Lisa Lampanelli.

 By Ariel Alexovich
REDEYE

ARIEL@TRIBUNE.COM | @MISSARIEL

DENISE RICHARDS

Reason for roasting: Not only did Richards and Sheen navigate a turbulent marriage, Richards had to deal with inane tweets from Sheen calling her "#DUH-neese POOR-ards."

Sample joke: "Thanks, Charlie, for giving me so much fodder for my new memoir. Did I say 'fodder'? I meant 'horrible memories and thousands of dollars in psychiatrist bills.' Thanks."

ANGUS T. JONES

Reason for roasting: As the "half" in "Two and a Half Men," Jones has been subject to Sheen's antics for eight of his formative years.

Sample joke: "I grew up idolizing you. Now, in terms of idols, I rank you below Ruben Studdard. But still above Taylor Hicks."

LINDSAY LOHAN

Reason for roasting: On a radio show in February, Sheen had the gall to dole out this advice to Lohan: "Work on your impulse control."

Sample joke: "Impulse control? I'd totally come over there and slap you if this ankle bracelet weren't so constricting."

MIKE EPPS

Reason for roasting: None? However, it would be a crime if Epps were not given the opportunity to perform in person the spot-on Sheen impersonation he did for a Baltimore radio station.

Sample joke (from his real impression): "How could you be cured? You go to Mars, you get peroxide, you get Band-Aids ... I'm on Charlie Sheen!"

TIGERS

Reason for roasting: Their species got a bad rep when their tiger blood was said to be the reason behind Sheen's spectacular public collapse.

Sample joke: "Rawwwrr RAAAAWR!" A mauling ensues.

That's rich

It's good to be a leading lady in Hollywood. Angelina Jolie and Sarah Jessica Parker tied for the top spot in Forbes' list of the highest-paid actresses, both raking in an estimated $30 million last year. With $28 million in earnings, Jennifer Aniston and Reese Witherspoon were tied at No. 2, while Kristen Stewart and Julia Roberts came in third with their $20 million paychecks.

“When Chris Evans first took his shirt off on the set of ‘Captain America,’ I just instinctively grabbed his man boob.”

—Hayley Atwell, the leading lady in “Captain America,” to Esquire on getting her first glimpse of her muscular co-star’s chest

Monster getaway

Adam Sandler wants to suck your blood—in 3-D. Happy Gilmore himself will voice the role of Dracula in “Hotel Transylvania,” an animated film set in a resort for monsters, Reuters reports. Kevin James (Frankenstein), David Spade (Quasimodo) and Andy Samberg (a regular guy staying at the hotel) are among a host of Sandler’s friends on board for the project, due in theaters next year.

Cooliest bloke in town

Jay-Z’s got 99 problems but the British ain’t one. Mr. Beyonce is taking his 40/40 restaurant and bar franchise to London in a partnership with soccer star Ashley Cole, Reuters reports. The big question: Will Jay conform to English style and rock some gaudy headwear for the grand opening? We sure hope so.

Rihanna

Mo money, mo Rihanna

Studio execs are putting their money where their mouth is ... and by their mouth, we mean Rihanna. NPR calculated the cost of RiRi’s latest single, “Man Down,” as nearly $1.1 million. That figure includes $15,000 for a songwriter and $1 million for things like marketing and buying fancy dinners for radio directors. We’re gonna call this one “not a steal.”

Uncovered

Justin Bieber is not so hot as a cover boy. Vanity Fair’s February cover that featured the Biebs is on track to be the worst-selling issue since July 1999, wwd.com reports.

Who holds the current record? Will Smith, promoting “Wild Wild West.”
